Art Unit 1713

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. § 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-15 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 103(a) as being unpatentable over Paul taken in view of Cantillo et al. or Dressler et al.

The Paul patent shows vulcanizable rubber compositions which are based on the instantly claimed rubber as well as the instantly claimed hydroxy diphenylamine. This patent is silent as to the specific incorporation of a methylene donor. The Dressler and Cantillo patents each show rubber compositions as well. These patents discuss the desirable incorporation of both methylene donors, methylene acceptors and antioxidants. The Examiner maintains that it would be prima facie obvious to add the methylene donors as shown in Dressler and Cantillo to the composition of Paul given the understanding by one of ordinary skill in the art that the methylene donors are desirable ingredients in vulcanizable rubber compositions.

Art Unit 1713

This rejection could be taken another way in that it would be prima facie obvious to add the antioxidant which is the instantly claimed hydroxy diphenylamine to the compositions of Dressler or Cantillo thus resulting in the incorporation of the methylene acceptor in combination with the methylene donor in a rubber composition as instantly claimed. It should be noted that the ingredients do not need to be added for the same reason in order to render the instantly claimed invention prima facie obvious. As such, the claims are rendered prima facie obvious.
